Abstracts

Duty-free travel retail refers to the sale of goods in specific stores that are exempt from local taxes and duties. These stores are typically located in international airports, seaports, and select border areas, allowing international travelers to purchase items tax-free while departing or arriving in a country. The primary aim of duty-free retail is to provide a convenient shopping option for travelers, offering a range of products including alcohol, tobacco, cosmetics, luxury goods, and unique local items.The uniqueness of the duty-free travel retail market lies in its ability to offer consumers the opportunity to save on taxes, particularly on high-end and luxury products. This tax exemption makes duty-free shopping attractive to international travelers, who often seek out exclusive items at better prices compared to regular retail outlets. Moreover, many duty-free shops curate a selection of region-specific and limited-edition products, catering to consumers' desires for personalization and rarity.As global tourism gradually rebounds, the duty-free travel retail market is experiencing significant growth. According to market research, the Asia-Pacific region continues to dominate this sector, particularly with the resurgence of Chinese travelers whose purchasing power is recovering. Looking ahead, digital transformation is poised to play a crucial role in the evolution of duty-free retail. Many retailers are adopting online pre-ordering systems and click-and-collect services, enhancing the shopping experience and convenience for consumers.Additionally, the rising trend of sustainable consumption is influencing the sector, as more travelers prioritize environmentally-friendly products. Duty-free retailers will need to adapt by incorporating sustainable offerings into their inventory to meet these changing consumer preferences.The duty-free travel retail market has seen significant growth in recent years, particularly with the recovery of international travel. According to market reports, the Asia-Pacific region is currently the largest duty-free market globally, driven by increasing demand from Chinese travelers. Furthermore, as consumers show greater interest in luxury goods and unique products, duty-free shops
