Household Water Purifier Cartridge is a replaceable filtration component used in residential water purification equipment to remove impurities, microorganisms, heavy metals, chlorine, odors, and other contaminants from drinking water. The cartridge typically integrates filtration materials such as activated carbon, PP melt-blown fiber, ultrafiltration membranes, reverse osmosis membranes, and ion exchange materials. It is mainly used in household water purifiers, countertop purifiers, under-sink filtration systems, and smart drinking water devices. The product boundary includes replacement filter cartridges for household water purification equipment, excluding complete water purifier machines, commercial filtration systems, and industrial water treatment membranes.

The household water purifier cartridge industry chain includes upstream suppliers of filter materials, activated carbon, membrane materials, plastic housings, sealing components, and packaging materials; the midstream sector covers cartridge design,
