Abstracts

According to our (Global Info Research) latest study, the global Hot Rolled Ribbed Bars Fine (HRBF) market size was valued at US$ 38840 million in 2024 and is forecast to a readjusted size of USD 42150 million by 2031 with a CAGR of 1.2% during review period.

Continuously hot-rolled steel sheet is produced by passing heated steel slabs through a series of rolling stands in a continuous mill. This process reduces the thickness of the slab and elongates it into a long sheet or coil. The high temperature during rolling allows for significant deformation of the steel. The resulting product has a relatively rough surface finish and is typically used in applications where surface appearance is not critical or where further processing, such as cold rolling or coating, is required. It's used in various industries, including automotive, construction, and appliance manufacturing.

The continuously hot-rolled steel sheet industry is a vital component of the global steel market, serving a wide range of downstream industries. Current trends indicate a strong focus on producing higher-strength steels with improved formability and weldability to meet the evolving demands of the automotive, construction, and other sectors. There is also a growing emphasis on producing thinner gauge sheets to reduce weight and improve fuel efficiency in vehicles. Sustainability is a key driver, with manufacturers investing in technologies to reduce energy consumption, emissions, and waste during production. The use of recycled steel is also increasing. The industry is also witnessing advancements in rolling mill technology, automation, and process control, leading to improved product quality, consistency, and production efficiency. Market dynamics are influenced by global economic conditions, raw material prices (iron ore, coal), trade policies, and demand from key end-use sectors. The growth of infrastructure projects in developing economies continues to drive demand for hot-rolled sheet.
