Abstracts

According to this study, the global Bumper Stickers market size will reach US$ million by 2031.

Bumper stickers are one of the most effective solutions at the disposal of product vendors. Bumper stickers have been around for a while now, and their preference is expected to be high, over the forecast period as well. Bumper stickers are advertising labels that are attached to vehicles, which then act as a mobile advertising platform. The mobility gives bumper stickers a competitive edge over its static counterparts.

The global bumper stickers market is expected to be fuelled largely by increasing demand from the supply-side for better means of advertising. Bumper stickers are considered by effective as they enable mass-advertisement. Due to their mobility, bumper stickers reach a much larger audience and therefore have high preference among vendors as a fuss-free and cost effective advertising solution. The global bumper stickers market has a largely positive outlook, which is attributed to the various industries they find applications in. Product and service advertising campaign is a must have for any growing brand in today?s market, and as a result, companies operating in any industry emphasize on enhancing their brand advertising campaign to increase their reach. Other reasons for high preference for bumper stickers are ? customizability and low cost. Bumper stickers can be designed specifically to indicate the nature of business, thereby standing out in the crowd. Bumper stickers also cost less to order. Bumper stickers generate higher revenues per customer gained, thereby making bumper stickers an ideal choice for vendors to market their products. Despite the largely positive outlook, there are certain factors that might hamper growth of the global bumper stickers market, such as, increasing use of other advertising solutions. Bumper stickers face competition from tote-displays, billboard hoardings, and other such means
