Abstracts

The global Maritime and Shipping Consulting market size is predicted to grow from US$ 2736 million in 2025 to US$ 3942 million in 2032; it is expected to grow at a CAGR of 5.5% from 2026 to 2032.

Maritime and Shipping Consulting refers to professional advisory services provided to shipowners, shipping companies, port and terminal operators, shipbuilding and marine engineering companies, financial and investment institutions, governments, and regulatory authorities. Major services include shipping market research and forecasting, corporate strategy and commercial planning, fleet planning and asset valuation, operational optimization, port and terminal planning, vessel technical consulting, maritime risk management, decarbonization and energy transition, regulatory compliance, and investment and transaction advisory. The industry is primarily driven by professional expertise, maritime databases, market models, technical capabilities, and project experience, covering major maritime sectors such as container shipping, dry bulk shipping, tankers, gas shipping, passenger shipping, and cruise shipping.

The global Maritime and Shipping Consulting market is characterized by a high degree of specialization, significant differences in project value, and relatively strong client relationships. Market demand is mainly driven by global seaborne trade, fleet renewal and expansion, port infrastructure investment, vessel transactions, and strategic adjustments by shipping companies. In recent years, increasingly stringent international maritime environmental regulations and accelerating shipping decarbonization have created growing consulting demand for alternative fuels, vessel energy efficiency, carbon emissions management, green fleet planning, and digital operations. Competition involves large management consulting firms, specialized maritime consultancies, classification societies, and shipping data and research organizations,
