BMI View: The devaluation of the tenge in early 2014 and elevated consumer price inflation (forecast to reach 9.0% in 2015) will impact on household spending in Kazakhstan. However, private consumption is set to remain the primary driver of economic growth in the longer term, which keeps our outlook positive for spending on food and drink. Future drivers of growth will be portfolio expansion by major manufacturers and importers, including strong marketing and promotional campaigns targeting younger and more aspirational consumers. The Kazakh government's recently announced financial incentive, offering up to 30% cash back to foreign investors in newly created firms, should boost investment into domestic companies in a country that is already an attractive destination for foreign investment.

Headline Industry Data (local currency):
