Abstracts

CBRN threats are global and they can become pandemic and threat to global population if ignored in one country. With the experience of covid19; one must take a lesson that no country can remain safe today if the biological weapon is used in some far reached country.

The new form of biological threat is silent and it is coming from the backdoor. And, therefore, CBRN defense is going to become collective initiative than keeping it restricted to the national level. Particularly those countries that have knowledge, expertise and equipment to control CBRN threats will need to come forward and help less-privileged countries with training and defense material on CBRN.

Integrating capabilities for installing, operating and training on CBRN threat detection technologies and protection against weapons of mass destruction (WMD) through deployment of monitoring and surveillance systems, radars and satellites are becoming next big market opportunities.

Few of the interesting findings of the research report include increasing inclusion of multi-sensor technologies, software and communication technologies use of unmanned monitoring and surveillance systems to conduct aerial surveillance will grow many folds and it will become a key component of CBRN countermeasures and;

Use of centralized data management and analytics will change the entire CBRN to new levels of must have technology for military and homeland applications.

Demand for CBRN technology is growing worldwide. The long pending decommissioning of conventional CBRN systems with modern, unmanned and multi-sensor based CBRN systems was the need for various nations.

Scope for CBRN software using Software as a Service is under consideration, especially by Europe and the U.S. led association. Developing a cluster of integrated CBRN systems to generate data from multiple sources and perform data analytics and intelligence at central location is the key purpose.

Unmanned CBRN monitoring and surveillance systems will grow in many folds. Zero causality and real time decisions are the two key drivers for using land based and aerial unmanned CBRN systems.

CBRN solution providers invest heavily on high speed bandwidths to securely transmit data at lightning speed. Use of the Internet is crucial for communication between the field teams and control room. Internet has improved the efficiency of communication and data transfer on real time.
