Abstracts

According to this study, the global Intimate Wash market size will reach US$ million by 2031.

The vagina is an area regularly inhabited with good bacteria that can be found in other parts of our body as well. The most common vaginal bacteria is the Lactobacillus, which helps maintaining the acidity (pH 3.5) of the vagina by producing lactic acid that protects the vagina from various infections using anti-bacterial activity. The main reason for itches, discharges, inflammations and infections is the violation of the natural bacterial balance and change in the acidity level, which can be the result of various factors such as antibiotics, a too tight pair of jeans or staying in an unsterile environment.

Intimate wash keeps the pH level balanced and protects the vagina from infections and inflammations. It could also avoid itches in the vagina by regularly use vaginal wash.
