About Diatomite Market

Diatomite is a chalk-like, soft, friable, earthy, very finegrained, siliceous sedimentary rock. It is very finely porous, very low in density, and essentially chemically inert in most liquids and gases. Diatomite is used principally as a filter aid; but it has many other applications, such as an absorbent for industrial spills and as pet litter, a filler in a variety of products from paints to dry chemicals, an insulation material as sawn and molded shapes as well as loose granular, a mild abrasive in polishes, and a silica additive in cement and various other compounds.

USA was a world leader in diatomite production; its share is 32.7% of world total. On the second place is China with 22% share.
