Research Highlights:

The German market for natural & organic cosmetics is the largest in Europe, with the market share of total cosmetic sales exceeding 5% for the first-time in 2008. The market continues to show high growth as existing manufacturers, new entrants and retailers continuously launch new products.

The popularity of natural & organic cosmetics has led major retail chains to launch products under their private labels. Discount stores like Aldi have also jumped on the bandwagon and introduced private label products. As a consequence, Germans have access to the most competitively priced natural cosmetics in Europe.

High market growth rates are expected to continue so that the German market remains the most important in Europe. Increasing distribution and broadening consumer demand are expected to drive market growth. Natural cosmetic sales are projected to comprise almost 10% of total cosmetic sales in the coming years.
