Abstracts

A diving suit is a device or garment that is designed to safeguard a diver from the extreme cold temperature under the sea. Diving suit finds its application for underwater work such as civil engineering, marine salvage, pearl shell diving, commercial diving work, naval diving applications to name few.

The key factors that drive the growth of the diving suits market include increase in deep-sea exploration activities, surge in coastal tourism and recreation activities, and expansion of the deep sea diving industry. However, factors such as rise in water pollution and overfishing have resulted in depletion of aquatic life. Extreme depletion of aquatic animals is anticipated to disrupt the aquatic food chain, and lead to marine flora & fauna wipe out. Extinction of coral flora and fauna along with increasing deep sea diving fatalities are expected to challenge the market growth. Furthermore, novel innovations in material have gained huge traction in the recent years. In addition introduction of eco-friendly diving suit materials is anticipated to create lucrative opportunities for the market expansion in the upcoming future.

The global diving suits market is segmented into type, price range, sales channel, and region. Depending on type, the diving suits market is bifurcated into drysuit and wetsuit. The market also segments global diving suits market by price range into economy, luxury, and premium. Based on sales channel the global market is studied across offline channels and online channels. Region wise, the market is analyzed across North America, Europe, Asia-Pacific, and LAMEA

The diving suits market is witnessing a surge in popularity around the world owing to expansion of coastal tourism.
