Abstracts

Goat milk comes with maximum nutritional properties as compared to cattle milk. It is categorized into various products such as milk, milk powder, cheese, yogurt, butter, and other products. It has many health benefits. It contains low level of cholesterol, and is easier to digest. According to the Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO), India, Bangladesh, and Pakistan are the major producers of goat milk while, U.S., France, Mexico, and China are the major consumers of goat milk products.

People have changed their choices regarding daily diet, since the past decade. The reason for such choice is due to the prevalence of health-related diseases such as obesity and other chronic diseases. Goat milk is rich source of protein, calcium, iron, fats, vitamins, iron, and other essential nutrients. Moreover, it is easier to digest, less inflammatory, and has lesser number of allergens. These health benefits are responsible to drive the growth of the market. In addition, rise in lactose intolerance among consumers worldwide is creating potential demand for lactose-free products or products with low lactose content. Moreover, government initiation in some Asian and European countries are offering various schemes and subsidy for the dairy farms, which also fuels the growth of the goat milk market. However, goat milk is a niche product and is therefore commercially expensive as compared to cattle milks. Also, there are number of organizations, who are promoting vegan food products. Consumers are preferring plant-based milk and milk products as a substitute for animal milk. These factors hamper the growth of the market. On the contrary, innovations in the dairy processing equipment and aggressive marketing strategies which increase the awareness for goat milk and its products create different opportunities for the market players.

The global goat milk market is segmented on the basis of product, distribution channel, and region. Depending on product, the goat milk market is classified into milk, cheese, milk powder, and other.
