The automotive chain market in India is relatively dependent on the behavior of the two-wheeler market and roads conditions in the country. The industry has showcased moderate OEM growth and an exponential replacement segment growth largely trading on the back dated OEM growth and the reduced life of the transmission chains due to Indian road conditions. The transmission chains market has inclined at a CAGR of 14.8% from the period FY'2006-FY'2011. The sales of automotive transmission chains in FY'2011 have increased to USD ~ million (INR ~ crore) from USD ~ million (INR ~ crore) in FY'2006.

The transmission chain market in India is majorly dominated by the OEMs with ~ market share in FY'2011. The replacement market is highly price competitive with the presence of 3 domestic players and several unorganized manufactures. In FY'2011, drive chains accounted for around ~% of the total replacement transmission chains sales while cam chains contributed around ~% of the replacement chains market in the same fiscal year.

The Indian transmission chain market is concentrated amongst few players such as LG Balakrishnan and TIDC. LG Balakrishnan is the largest transmission chain manufacturer and distributor in India. The company's transmission chain brand Rolon accounted for around ~% of the total transmission chain market in India in FY'2011. TIDC is the second largest player in the market with its brand Diamond. The company in FY'2011 has around ~% market share in India. The company has a strong distribution network of around ~ dealers and ~ warehouses across the country.

The future prospects of the automotive transmission chain market in India are quite promising as the two-wheelers production and investment will increase in the coming year. The OEM segment will continue to maintain its dominance in the market in India with moderate growth given the past track record of 2 decades. Replacement transmission chain segment, on the other hand, will poise to achieve significant growth in coming years on the grounds of two wheelers industry growth of 25% and 27% respectively in FY'2010 and FY'2011.
