US Craft Spirits Market - Overview

The changes in taste and the growing demand for small batch, handmade beverages with unique flavor profiles is contributing to the growth of the US craft spirits market. The growing number of younger demographic is encouraging the market of these beverages in the US market. The growth of the economy is driving greater flexibility and giving consumers the luxury to demand handcrafted alcoholic beverages in the US market. The increasing in tourism and growing interest in visiting distilleries is encouraging manufacturers to invest in the development of new breweries in the US market. The rapid change in consumer palates, jaded existing products, ease in production, ease in regulations, and intensification of social drinking are some of the factors driving the growth of the US market. These factors will promote the demand for premium and artisanal craft beers with distinctive flavors in the US market over the next few years. The distilleries in the US market are adopting the incubator model of business which allows small brands to access corporate money, either through capital investments or by selling a majority stake while remaining in control of the trade. These business models will promote the growth of the market and result in the production of unique beverages in the US. The availability of best-selling gins, whiskeys, rums, and vodkas will also contribute to the revenues in the US craft spirits market.

The focus on the mixing of handmade craftsmanship, tons of culture, and locavore ethics are resulting in the thriving craft brewing industry and distilling industries in the US market. The new trends of consuming and producing absinthe, liqueur, Amaro, and aquavit will add to the growing revenues in the US market. The US craft spirits market is expected to reach revenues of more than $20 billion by 2023, growing at an impressive CAGR of over 32% during 2018-2023. The report also includes market size in terms of volumes produced during the forecast period.

US Craft Spirits Market - Dynamics

The growing investments in delivering the perfect on-site experiences are augmenting the growth of the US craft spirits market. The new trend of agritourism is leading to the promotion of craft distilleries demonstrating their manufacturing process thereby, simultaneously building brand awareness and loyalty in the US market. The increasing focus on consumer engagement and leveraging it to fortify authenticity of their brand and product will help vendors to attract new consumers and increase their market share during the forecast period. The market is witnessing the use of space of a rag factory for a distillery to acquiring a property that uses solar power to offset its carbon footprint, craft makers are going great lengths to weave elements of interest to their sites to gain larger consumer groups in the US market. The increase in innovations at tasting rooms and distilleries that enrich the experience of a distillery-tourer will boost demand in the US craft spirits market. For instance, Anchor Distilling Company in San Francisco has a provision of a walk through an edible roof garden along with a penthouse bar to engage consumers in the US market.

US Craft Spirits Market - Segmentation

This market research report includes a detailed segmentation of the market by product, by product size, and by distribution.

US Craft Spirits Market – By Products

Innovations in styles and flavors of whiskey to boost revenues in the US craft spirits market during the forecast period

The US craft spirits market by products is segmented into whiskey, gin, vodka, brandy, rum, liqueurs, and others. Craft whiskey dominated the majority of the market share in 2017, growing at a CAGR of approximately 32% during the forecast period. The efforts on improving the quality and breadth of whiskey driving the demand for premium grade products in this segment in the US market. The use of a combination of old school and modern methods of distilling of Kentucky and Tennessee bourbons that include single malts, ryes, white whiskeys, and blends will augment the growth of the US market during the forecast period. The growing demand for darker liquors, artisanal bourbons, and ryes is leading to the entry of new producers in the US craft spirits market. The rising focus on the innovations that will enable distillers to add personality to the whiskey's profile will transform the US craft spirits market. Additionally, rising consumer awareness will create a positive impact on the growth of this segment in the US market.
