Fatty acids are widely used in many industries such as personal care products and rubber, household care, detergents and plastics, etc.

After crisis in 2009, the oleo chemicals market has showed strong growth, driven by increase of global demand for more environment-friendly products.

With more than a half of global output Asia is the leading fatty acids manufacturer and also the largest consumer.

Malaysia, Indonesia, China and India are leading producers with more than 90% of Asia fatty acid production.

CIS countries import fatty acids though some countries (Russia, Belarus) produce them but not in amounts enough to meet demand.

Global fatty acid consumption is expected to grow at average of 3% annually during the next five years.
