Global Cheese powder Market to reach USD 863.1 billion by 2025. The Cheese powder market is developing and expanding at a significant pace. The cheese is a food product precisely derived from milk as cheese is produced in wide range of textures, flavors & forms by coagulation of the milk protein casein. The cheese powder is mainly considering as dehydrated cheese. The cheese powder is a substitute for hard cheese owing to their convenience in shelf stability, storage and handling. The cheese powder can be marketed as reduced-fat or reduced-sodium by utilizing low fat & low salt cheese as the cheese ingredient. The manufacturers get a better value by utilizing high flavored cheese which makes much more favorable cheese powder. The cheese powder has surging demand outside the United States as countries with low dairy resources has developed western taste buds. An average American individual eats around 23 pounds of cheese per year. Cheddar cheese is considered as widely popular cheese on the global scenario. The cheddar is a firm to hard cheese with a natural color of pale to white to yellow. In the present scenario, A coloring agent is also included in the cheese milk that produces cheddar with an orange color. The flavor of cheddar cheese may range from mild to sharp depending on the duration of aging. The cheddar cheese has been majorly adopted owing to rise in the utility of convenience food in the fast food market across the globe. However, taking into consideration the process of converting cheese to cheese powder many volatile compounds which includes dimethyl sulfide and diacetyl could be lost that are quite pivotal to cheese flavor & many hamper the demand as well that could negatively impact the growth of cheese powder market. The price of cheese powder is also high comparing it with hard cheese which could also be an impactful factor in restraining the growth of cheese powder market on the global scenario. The Cheese powder market is anticipated to grow with a CAGR of 12.60% during the forecasted period of 2018-2025.
