Report Overview

Anastrozole API, or Anastrozole Active Pharmaceutical Ingredient, is a high-purity, pharmaceutical-grade compound used in the manufacturing of medications for the treatment of certain types of breast cancer. It is a selective, non-steroidal aromatase inhibitor that works by blocking the enzyme aromatase, which is responsible for converting androgens to estrogens in postmenopausal women. By inhibiting this enzyme, Anastrozole API reduces estrogen levels in the body, thereby inhibiting the growth of hormone-receptor-positive breast cancer cells that rely on estrogen for growth and proliferation. This API is typically used in the form of tablets and is prescribed to postmenopausal women with early-stage breast cancer, often as part of adjuvant therapy to reduce the risk of cancer recurrence. The quality and safety of Anastrozole API are crucial, as it must meet stringent regulatory standards to ensure its efficacy and minimize potential side effects when used in pharmaceutical formulations.

In 2024, the global Anastrozole API market is projected to reach approximately USD xx Million, with expectations to grow at a compound annual growth rate (CAGR) of around xx between 2024 and 2033.
