Report Overview

Biodegradable laundry detergent refers to cleaning products formulated with plant-based or naturally derived surfactants and enzymes that break down efficiently in the environment without leaving harmful residues. Unlike conventional detergents containing synthetic chemicals like phosphates and optical brighteners, biodegradable variants prioritize eco-friendly ingredients such as coconut or palm oil derivatives, citric acid, and essential oils, ensuring minimal ecological impact. These detergents are designed to decompose naturally within a short timeframe, reducing water pollution and toxicity to aquatic life while maintaining effective cleaning performance. The growing consumer shift toward sustainability, stricter environmental regulations, and increasing awareness of chemical pollution in water systems have driven demand for biodegradable detergents, positioning them as a key segment in the green household products market.
