Report Overview

Bleached Sulfate Hardwood Pulp (BSHP) is a type of high-quality papermaking pulp derived from hardwood trees, such as eucalyptus, birch, and maple. The term "bleached" indicates that the pulp has undergone a chemical process to remove impurities and color, resulting in a brighter, whiter final product. "Sulfate" refers to the kraft pulping process, which uses a mixture of sodium hydroxide and sodium sulfide to break down the lignin that binds the cellulose fibers in the wood. This process results in a strong, durable pulp with minimal environmental impact. "Hardwood" signifies that the pulp is made from hardwood trees, which typically produce a smoother, more uniform fiber compared to softwood pulp. Overall, BSHP is a premium-grade pulp used in the production of various paper products, such as printing and writing paper, tissue, and packaging materials, due to its strength, brightness, and versatility.
