Report Overview

Butyl rubber sealant is a material used for sealing, caulking, and bonding that usually consists of butyl rubber along with additives. This sealant has the characteristics of good weather resistance, strong oil resistance, high temperature resistance, and aging resistance, so it is widely used in industry and construction fields. It can be used to seal water pipes, windows, door gaps, concrete joints, etc. to prevent the penetration of water, gas or dust, and can fill irregular surface gaps to improve sealing performance. Butyl rubber sealants are generally divided into two types: single-component and two-component. One-component sealant refers to extruding it directly from the container without mixing other materials before construction; while two-component sealant requires mixing two or more components before use, and usually has better durability, properties and adhesion. In addition, butyl rubber sealants can be further divided into indoor sealants, outdoor sealants, high temperature resistant sealants, oil resistant sealants and other types according to their uses and characteristics to meet the use requirements of different occasions and needs.
