Abstracts

The 2025 U.S. tariff policies introduce profound uncertainty into the global economic landscape. This report critically examines the implications of recent tariff adjustments and international strategic countermeasures on CBD Skincare Products competitive dynamics, regional economic interdependencies, and supply chain reconfigurations. CBD skincare products are topical formulations that incorporate cannabidiol (CBD), a compound derived from the hemp plant, into various skincare items. These products are used on the skin and are designed to promote skin health by leveraging CBD's potential properties, such as reducing inflammation, calming irritation, and providing antioxidant effects. CBD is commonly found in moisturizers, facial oils, cleansers, masks, and serums intended for daily skincare routines. The CBD skincare market has been expanding steadily as consumer interest in natural and functional skincare continues to rise. Many users are drawn to the idea of integrating wellness elements into their beauty routines, and CBD is perceived as a multi-functional ingredient that supports skin balance and helps manage issues like redness, dryness, and breakouts. The market is characterized by innovation, with both established skincare brands and emerging startups experimenting with different formulations and delivery methods. Despite some regulatory uncertainties in various regions, the trend toward clean beauty and the desire for plant-based, non-toxic products have positioned CBD skincare as a promising segment. Furthermore, consumer education and growing awareness around CBD's potential skin benefits contribute to its increasing acceptance and demand in the cosmetic industry.

The global CBD Skincare Products market size was estimated at USD 1278.0 million in 2025 and is projected to grow at a compound annual growth rate (CAGR) of 20.60% during the forecast period.
