Report Overview

The custard mooncake is a modern variation of the traditional Chinese mooncake, typically consumed during the Mid-Autumn Festival. Unlike classic mooncakes filled with red bean paste or lotus seed paste, custard mooncakes feature a rich, creamy custard filling, often infused with flavors like salted egg yolk, matcha, or durian. The outer crust is usually soft and tender, sometimes resembling a baked or snow-skin (non-baked) texture. This product appeals to younger consumers and those seeking a fusion of Western and Asian dessert influences, blending the nostalgic cultural significance of mooncakes with contemporary taste preferences. Its popularity has grown in recent years, particularly in urban markets and among overseas Chinese communities, driven by innovation in flavors and premium packaging. However, competition is intensifying as bakeries and confectionery brands introduce similar gourmet variations. Seasonal demand remains a key factor, though some brands extend availability through limited-edition releases or year-round online sales.
