Report Overview

Dental Gingival Retraction Cord is a specialized dental product designed to facilitate the process of dental impression taking and restorative procedures. This cord is made from absorbent, braided fibers that are placed into the gingival sulcus, the space between the tooth and the gum, to retract or pull back the gingival tissue. The primary function of the retraction cord is to create a clear path for impression materials to accurately capture the tooth structure without interference from the surrounding gum tissue. This ensures a precise fit for dental restorations such as crowns, bridges, and inlays. The cord may be impregnated with chemicals, such as hemostatic agents or antimicrobial substances, to control bleeding and reduce the risk of infection during dental procedures. It is an essential tool in dental practices for achieving high-quality impressions and successful restorative outcomes.
