Report Overview

EPDM (ethylene propylene diene monomer) roofing membrane is a synthetic rubber material widely used in commercial and residential roofing applications due to its durability, flexibility, and weather resistance. It is a single-ply membrane available in black or white, with thicknesses typically ranging from 45 to 90 mils, and is known for its long lifespan (30-50 years), UV resistance, and ability to withstand extreme temperatures (-40°F to 300°F). EPDM is commonly installed using ballast, adhesives, or mechanical fasteners, making it versatile for flat or low-slope roofs. The material's cost-effectiveness, ease of installation, and low maintenance requirements have solidified its position in the roofing industry, particularly for large-scale commercial projects, institutional buildings, and residential properties seeking energy-efficient solutions. The market for EPDM roofing membranes is influenced by factors such as construction activity, sustainability trends, and the demand for durable, weather-resistant roofing materials in regions prone to harsh climates.
