Report Overview

Flocking Wallpaper is a type of decorative wall covering that features a unique textured surface created by the application of small, soft fibers or particles onto the wallpaper's surface. This process, known as flocking, involves the use of adhesive and tiny fibers, which are then electrostatically charged and attracted to the adhesive-coated wallpaper. The result is a velvety, plush finish that adds depth, texture, and visual interest to walls. Flocking wallpaper is often used in residential and commercial settings for its luxurious appearance and tactile appeal. It is available in a variety of colors, patterns, and designs, making it a versatile option for a range of interior design styles and purposes. The fibers used in flocking can be made from materials such as polyester, nylon, or other synthetics, which contribute to the durability and easy maintenance of the wallpaper.
