Report Overview

Galfan Coating is a protective surface treatment applied to metal products, specifically a type of zinc-aluminum alloy coating. It is composed of 55% aluminum, 43.5% zinc, and 1.5% magnesium, which provides excellent corrosion resistance and durability. This coating is known for its ability to form a stable, passive layer when exposed to the atmosphere, enhancing the lifespan of the coated metal. Galfan Coating is often used in various industries, such as automotive, construction, and infrastructure, for applications where resistance to harsh environmental conditions is required. It offers superior performance compared to traditional galvanized coatings due to its higher resistance to corrosion, particularly in marine and rural environments. The coating process involves dipping or spraying the metal with the Galfan alloy, creating a uniform and adherent layer that protects the underlying metal from rust and other forms of degradation.
