Abstracts

The 2025 U.S. tariff policies introduce profound uncertainty into the global economic landscape. This report critically examines the implications of recent tariff adjustments and international strategic countermeasures on Anethole competitive dynamics, regional economic interdependencies, and supply chain reconfigurations. Anethole is a natural or synthetic aromatic compound. It is a colorless to pale yellow oily liquid at room temperature with a unique anise aroma and sweet taste. Anethole is the main component of essential oils extracted from the fruits of plants such as star anise, accounting for about 80-90% of the content of star anise oil. In addition, it can also be produced by chemical synthesis. Naturally extracted anethole has more advantages in quality and aroma. In recent years, with the growing demand for natural ingredients in the food, pharmaceutical and daily chemical industries, the anethole market has continued to expand, among which synthetic anethole occupies an important share due to its cost-effectiveness and technical advantages. The improvement of environmental awareness has made consumers more fond of natural spices, and the advancement of modern extraction technology has also reduced the production cost of natural anethole, further promoting the development of the industry. Among regional markets, the Asia-Pacific region has the greatest potential, but it needs to deal with trade policies and environmental challenges.

The global Anethole market size was estimated at USD 169.0 million in 2025 and is projected to grow at a compound annual growth rate (CAGR) of 4.00% during the forecast period.
