Abstracts

To improve the taste as well as the consumer appeal glazes are applied on the surfaces of the products such as cakes, pastries, buns, rolls, breads, pies in the bakery industry. Bakery Glazes have usually been used to cover the surface of the baked products and to give the product a glossy finish in cases where even the product is not fully iced and/or acts as a buffer between the relatively high-humidity bakery product and the relatively low-humidity icing process. Bakery glazes are usually of two forms and are either added before and/or after baking to the surface of the bakery product. Bakery glazes are usually made of whole eggs and water, and can contain various starches, sugars and gums. Egg-containing bakery glazes are well known as a possible source to improve the quality of the product and are commonly used in bakery glazes.
