Abstracts

Banana extracts and flavors are concentrated solutions derived from bananas or synthetically produced to replicate the natural taste and aroma of the fruit, used primarily to impart banana flavoring in a wide range of food and beverage products without the bulk, perishability, or texture of fresh fruit. These formulations can be natural, derived through processes like solvent extraction or distillation from real bananas, or artificial, created using chemical compounds such as isoamyl acetate to mimic the characteristic flavor profile. They are available in various forms including liquid extracts, emulsions, powders, and oleoresins, tailored for different applications such as baking, confectionery, dairy products, beverages, and processed foods, where consistency, shelf stability, and intensity of flavor are critical.
