Report Overview

Bancassurance refers to the partnership between banks and insurance companies, where banks distribute insurance products to their customers through their existing distribution channels, leveraging their customer base, brand trust, and financial expertise. This model allows banks to offer a broader range of financial services, including life, health, property, and casualty insurance, while insurers gain access to a wider customer pool without heavy investment in direct sales infrastructure. Bancassurance operates on a commission-based or joint venture structure, with products often tailored to complement banking services such as loan protection, savings-linked insurance, or retirement plans. The integration of banking and insurance services enhances customer convenience, improves cross-selling opportunities, and drives revenue diversification for financial institutions. Regulatory frameworks, customer trust in banks, and the alignment of insurance products with banking needs are critical factors shaping the bancassurance market.
