Report Overview

Benzophenone-1 (BP-1) is a synthetic organic compound belonging to the benzophenone family, primarily used as a UV filter in personal care and cosmetic products such as sunscreens, lotions, and lip balms to protect against ultraviolet (UV) radiation. It absorbs UVB and short UVA rays, preventing skin damage from sun exposure. The compound is valued for its stability and compatibility with various formulations but has faced scrutiny due to potential endocrine-disrupting properties, leading to regulatory restrictions in certain regions. Despite this, it remains a key ingredient in cosmetics, particularly in markets where alternative UV filters face stricter limitations. The demand for BP-1 is driven by the growing awareness of sun protection and the expanding cosmetics industry, though shifts toward safer alternatives could influence future market dynamics. Regulatory trends, consumer preferences, and innovation in non-toxic UV filters will play a critical role in shaping its market trajectory.
