Report Overview

The C-reactive protein (CRP) test is a diagnostic blood test used to measure the level of CRP, a protein produced by the liver in response to inflammation in the body. Elevated CRP levels are associated with infections, autoimmune diseases, chronic inflammatory conditions, and cardiovascular risks, making it a widely utilized biomarker in clinical settings. The global market for CRP testing is driven by the rising prevalence of inflammatory and cardiovascular diseases, increasing demand for early disease detection, and advancements in high-sensitivity CRP (hs-CRP) assays for cardiovascular risk assessment. Key market players include diagnostic companies offering automated analyzers, point-of-care testing devices, and laboratory-based immunoassays. The market is segmented by test type (standard CRP and hs-CRP), application (cardiovascular risk assessment, infectious diseases, autoimmune disorders), and end-user (hospitals, diagnostic labs, research institutions). Growth is further supported by technological innovations, expanding healthcare infrastructure in emerging economies, and growing awareness of preventive healthcare. However, pricing pressures and regulatory hurdles in some regions may pose challenges to market expansion. North America and Europe dominate due to high healthcare spending and established diagnostic protocols, while Asia-Pacific shows rapid growth driven by increasing disease burden and improving healthcare access.

The global C Reactive Protein Test CRP market size was estimated at USD 724.74 million in 2024 and is projected to grow at a compound annual growth rate (CAGR) of 6.06% during the forecast period.
