Abstracts

To address the blind spots, high costs of manpower patrols, and insufficient deterrence in specific environments associated with traditional security methods, canine security services have emerged. Since the establishment of a systematic police dog training system in the mid-20th century, this service has become an indispensable component of modern security systems. Currently, canine security services have evolved into a professional security solution integrating guard dog patrolling, sniffer reconnaissance, special environment operations, and human-dog collaborative response capabilities. It is widely used in areas such as guarding critical infrastructure, security for large-scale events, logistics and warehousing inspections, and special law enforcement missions, effectively compensating for blind spots in technological security, improving emergency response speed, and creating a powerful psychological deterrent.
