Abstracts

Cannabigerol (CBG) is one of more than 120 identified cannabinoid compounds found in the plant genus Cannabis. Cannabigerol is the decarboxylated form of cannabigerolic acid, the parent molecule from which other cannabinoids are synthesized. Cannabigerol is a minor constituent of cannabis. During plant growth, most of the cannabigerol is converted into other cannabinoids, primarily tetrahydrocannabinol (THC) or cannabidiol (CBD), leaving about 1% cannabigerol in the plant.

Growing Interest in CBG: CBG gained attention as a non-psychoactive cannabinoid that could have various potential health benefits. Researchers were studying its potential anti-inflammatory, analgesic, and neuroprotective properties, which generated interest from both the medical and wellness sectors.

Product Development: CBD and THC had dominated the market, but CBG was emerging as a popular alternative. Companies were investing in research and development to create CBG-rich strains and products, including oils, capsules, topicals, and edibles.

Market Expansion: As the legal landscape for cannabis and hemp continued to evolve, CBG products were becoming more widely available. States and countries were revising their regulations to accommodate CBG, potentially leading to market expansion.

Consumer Awareness: There was a growing awareness among consumers about CBG and its potential benefits. Educational efforts and marketing campaigns were helping people understand the differences between cannabinoids like CBD, THC, and CBG.

Price Fluctuations: CBG-rich strains were still relatively rare, which could lead to price fluctuations. The cost of CBG products might be higher compared to CBD due to the challenges of cultivating CBG-rich plants.

The global Cannabigerol (CBG) market size was estimated at USD 8280.0 million in 2025 and is projected to grow at a compound annual growth rate (CAGR) of 13.90% during the forecast period.
