Abstracts

Cat food subscription service is a service model that delivers cat food directly to customers' doorsteps on a regular basis. Customers can customize the delivery frequency according to their cat's needs. Under this service model, customers typically choose their preferred cat food brand, type, and size, and then determine the delivery interval, such as weekly, bi-weekly, or monthly. Cat food subscription services offer a degree of flexibility, allowing customers to adjust, pause, or cancel their subscriptions at any time. Furthermore, some cat food subscription services may offer discounts, free delivery, and other incentives to attract customers. Driven by increasing pet ownership, rising consumer disposable income, and a growing preference for convenient and personalized pet care, the global cat food subscription service market is experiencing robust growth. The number of pet cats is rising globally; for example, in China, the number of urban households with cats reached 28.67 million in 2024, an increase of approximately 4.2 million from the previous year. More pet cats mean a stable and continuous demand for cat food, providing a vast market space for cat food subscription services. Pets are considered family members, and pet owners are increasingly concerned about their pets' health and quality of life, willing to purchase high-quality, personalized cat food. Cat food subscription services can provide customized products and services based on the cat's age, breed, and health condition, meeting this demand. Modern consumers lead fast-paced lives and prefer convenient shopping methods. Cat food subscription services deliver cat food regularly to customers' doorsteps, saving them time and effort, aligning with consumers' pursuit of convenience.
