Abstracts

The ceiling-mounted IV pole is a specialized medical equipment mounting system designed to provide secure, adjustable, and space-efficient suspension of intravenous therapy bags, pumps, and associated tubing from an overhead track or fixed point, typically installed in hospital rooms, intensive care units, or ambulatory care settings. These systems are engineered to enhance patient and staff safety by reducing trip hazards from floor-based poles, improve mobility and accessibility for both patients and healthcare providers during procedures or transport within a room, and optimize clinical workspace by freeing up floor area. Functionally, they often incorporate features such as height adjustability, rotational capability, weight-bearing capacity for multiple infusion pumps, and compatibility with existing medical gas rails or ceiling infrastructure, aligning with ergonomic and infection control standards in modern healthcare environments.
