Report Overview

A chirped mirror is a dielectric mirror that has chirped surfaces on it. Chirped spaces are spaces of varying depths for reflecting the light of varying wavelengths. These spaces are positioned between the dielectric layers or stacks. Chirped mirrors that are robustly optimized are extremely useful in dispersion compensation in ultra-short pulse lasers. In another type of chirped mirror, called the double chirped mirror, a multi-layered interference coating is used. As the bandwidth increases, the number of dielectric layers also needs to be increased.
