Report Overview

Closed End Funds (CEFs) are investment vehicles with a fixed number of shares that trade on stock exchanges like individual stocks, differing from open-end funds (such as mutual funds) which issue and redeem shares continuously. CEFs raise capital through an initial public offering (IPO), after which their shares are bought and sold in the secondary market, often trading at a premium or discount to their net asset value (NAV). These funds typically invest in a diversified portfolio of assets including equities, bonds, real estate, or alternative investments and often employ leverage to enhance returns. Unlike ETFs or mutual funds, CEFs do not create or redeem shares based on investor demand, leading to price fluctuations independent of NAV. They are favored by income-focused investors due to their frequent use of high-yield strategies, including regular distributions, though they may carry higher fees and risks related to leverage and market volatility. The CEF market is influenced by interest rate trends, investor sentiment, and the performance of underlying assets, with institutional and retail investors participating in both primary and secondary markets.
