Abstracts

Cold pressed dog food has emerged as a popular and health - conscious choice for pet owners. This type of dog food is manufactured through a unique process that involves pressing the ingredients at low temperatures, typically below 100°F (38°C). The low - temperature method helps preserve the integrity of the nutrients, enzymes, and antioxidants present in the raw materials. By avoiding high - heat processing, which can denature proteins and destroy heat - sensitive vitamins, cold pressed dog food retains more of its natural goodness. Cold pressed dog food comes in a variety of types to meet different dietary requirements of dogs. In terms of ingredient composition, there are single - protein - source options for dogs with allergies, multi - protein blends for a more diverse nutrient intake, and vegan/vegetarian formulas for those with specific dietary preferences. It is also segmented by life stage, with specialized formulas for puppies, adults, and seniors, each tailored to support the unique nutritional needs at different phases of a dog's life. Additionally, there are products designed to address special dietary needs such as grain - free options for dogs with grain intolerances, low - fat versions for weight management, and hypoallergenic varieties for allergy - prone canines. Overall, cold pressed dog food offers a high - quality alternative that aims to provide dogs with optimal nutrition for a healthy and vibrant life.

The global Cold Pressed Dog Food market size was estimated at USD 774.0 million in 2025 and is projected to grow at a compound annual growth rate (CAGR) of 7.10% during the forecast period.
