Abstracts

A convertible automotive seat refers to a type of child safety seat designed to adapt to a child's growth, offering multiple configurations to function as a rear-facing seat for infants and toddlers, a forward-facing seat for older children, and in many cases, a booster seat for school-aged children—typically accommodating weights ranging from 5 to 65 pounds or more, depending on the model. These seats are engineered with adjustable features such as harness systems, recline angles, and height positions to ensure proper safety and comfort as the child matures, aiming to provide long-term value by eliminating the need for multiple seat purchases at different developmental stages.
