Abstracts

Critical illness cover is a type of insurance policy that provides a lump-sum, tax-free payment to the policyholder upon diagnosis of a specified serious illness or medical condition, such as cancer, heart attack, stroke, or organ failure, as defined in the policy terms. It is distinct from traditional health or life insurance in that the payout is not contingent upon hospitalization costs or death but is instead intended to offer financial flexibility during recovery, covering expenses such as medical treatments not fully insured, household bills, debt repayment, or lifestyle adjustments necessitated by the illness. The coverage typically includes a predefined list of critical conditions, with some policies offering optional add-ons for less common ailments, and is designed to mitigate the economic impact of a health crisis by providing immediate liquidity when the insured individual is unable to work or faces substantial out-of-pocket costs.

The global Critical Illness Cover market size was estimated at USD 520.75 million in 2024 and is projected to grow at a compound annual growth rate (CAGR) of 5.20% during the forecast period.
