Abstracts

Dental bioceramic sealants are advanced materials used in endodontic treatment, particularly for root canal filling. These sealants are designed to provide excellent sealing properties while promoting biocompatibility and bioactivity within the tooth structure. With the improvement of people's awareness of oral health and the growth of demand for functional restoration, especially the increasing proportion of the elderly population, which has led to an increasing demand for tooth restoration, bioceramic sealer has been widely used in tooth restoration, root canal treatment and other fields due to its excellent biocompatibility, corrosion resistance and excellent aesthetic effects. In addition, the increasing demand of patients for minimally invasive treatment and rapid recovery solutions has prompted dentists to prefer safer and more effective bioceramic materials to replace traditional restorative materials. Continuous innovation in the field of scientific research and close cooperation between manufacturers and dental professionals have further promoted the research and development and application of such advanced materials, continuously expanding their market potential and technological advantages, thereby promoting the rapid development of the dental bioceramic sealer market.

The global Dental Bioceramic Sealer market size was estimated at USD 55.1 million in 2025 and is projected to grow at a compound annual growth rate (CAGR) of 7.90% during the forecast period.
