Abstracts

Disposable household food refers to pre-packaged, single-use food products designed for convenient consumption within domestic settings, eliminating the need for preparation, cooking, or cleanup. These items are typically characterized by their short shelf life, minimal packaging, and focus on immediate usability, encompassing categories such as ready-to-eat meals, snack packs, portion-controlled desserts, and shelf-stable beverages. The core value proposition lies in saving time and effort for consumers, aligning with modern lifestyles that prioritize convenience, speed, and efficiency in meal management, though this often comes at the expense of higher per-unit costs, potential environmental concerns due to packaging waste, and sometimes compromised nutritional quality compared to freshly prepared alternatives.

The global Disposable Household Food market size was estimated at USD 25680.42 million in 2024 and is projected to grow at a compound annual growth rate (CAGR) of 4.85% during the forecast period.
