Report Overview

The market for Duchenne Muscular Dystrophy (DMD) therapeutics focuses on treatments for a rare, progressive genetic disorder caused by mutations in the dystrophin gene, leading to severe muscle degeneration and premature mortality. Current therapies include corticosteroids to slow disease progression, exon-skipping drugs (e.g., eteplirsen, golodirsen) that target specific mutations to restore dystrophin production, and gene therapies in development aiming to deliver functional dystrophin genes. The market is driven by high unmet medical need, increasing R&D investment, and regulatory incentives such as orphan drug designations. However, challenges include high treatment costs, limited patient populations, and the complexity of delivering effective therapies due to the disease's genetic heterogeneity. Emerging innovations, such as CRISPR-based gene editing and antisense oligonucleotides, hold promise for transformative advances, while competition among biopharma companies intensifies. Pricing and reimbursement pressures, along with the need for long-term efficacy data, remain critical considerations in this evolving landscape.

The global Duchenne Muscular Dystrophy DMD Therapeutics market size was estimated at USD 3852.15 million in 2024 and is projected to grow at a compound annual growth rate (CAGR) of 42.52% during the forecast period.
