Abstracts

An endodontic apex locator is an essential electronic dental device used during root canal procedures to precisely determine the position of the apical constriction—the narrowest part of the root canal near the tip of the tooth root—by measuring electrical impedance between an instrument in the canal and a reference electrode attached to the patient's oral mucosa. This technology provides real-time feedback to clinicians, reducing reliance on X-rays and enhancing accuracy in working length determination, which is critical for successful cleaning, shaping, and obturation of the root canal system. Modern apex locators often integrate with dental operating microscopes and cone-beam computed tomography (CBCT) systems, offering multifunctional capabilities such as detecting root perforations, fractures, and calcified canals, thereby improving procedural safety, efficiency, and long-term treatment outcomes.

The global Endodontic Apex Locator market size was estimated at USD 120.45 million in 2024 and is projected to grow at a compound annual growth rate (CAGR) of 6.50% during the forecast period.
