Abstracts

Fixed telephony service, also known as landline service, refers to a voice communication system that uses physical wired connections?such as copper lines or fiber-optic cables?to transmit analog or digital signals between endpoints, enabling users to make and receive calls through dedicated telephone handsets connected to a fixed location. This traditional form of telecommunication relies on a network of underground or overhead cables and central switching systems to route calls, distinguishing it from mobile or Voice over Internet Protocol (VoIP) services that utilize wireless or internet-based infrastructures. While historically the dominant means of voice communication, fixed telephony has evolved to incorporate digital enhancements like Integrated Services Digital Network (ISDN) and fiber-to-the-home (FTTH) technologies, which support not only voice but also broadband internet and other data services, though its core function remains reliable, high-quality voice transmission with consistent service availability and often superior call clarity compared to wireless alternatives.

The global Fixed Telephony Service market size was estimated at USD 73600.0 million in 2024 and is projected to grow at a compound annual growth rate (CAGR) of -3.80% during the forecast period.
