Abstracts

The 2025 U.S. tariff policies introduce profound uncertainty into the global economic landscape. This report critically examines the implications of recent tariff adjustments and international strategic countermeasures on Flint Sandpaper competitive dynamics, regional economic interdependencies, and supply chain reconfigurations. Flint sandpaper is an abrasive sheet made by bonding finely crushed flint (a hard, silica-rich sedimentary mineral) onto paper or cloth backings using resin or glue, producing a low-cost, mild-cut abrasive primarily used for woodworking, surface preparation, and light finishing; its supply chain begins with flint extraction and crushing, followed by grading and purification of the abrasive grains, adhesive formulation (animal glue, urea-formaldehyde, or phenolic resin), backing production (paper, latex-paper, or cloth), and finally abrasive coating, curing, slitting, die-cutting, and packaging by sandpaper converters before distribution to hardware wholesalers, retail chains, and industrial users. In 2024, global flint sandpaper production reached 1.85 billion pcs against 2.3 billion in capacity, priced at USD 0.10-0.32 per pc, with manufacturers maintaining an average 24% gross margin.
