The 2025 U.S. tariff policies introduce profound uncertainty into the global economic landscape. This report critically examines the implications of recent tariff adjustments and international strategic countermeasures on Garlic Sauce competitive dynamics, regional economic interdependencies, and supply chain reconfigurations. Garlic sauce is a semi-fluid or paste-like compound condiment made primarily from garlic (garlic cloves) through processes such as mixing, seasoning, and sterilization. Essentially a processed garlic product, it features more stable formulations, longer shelf life, and more consistent flavor, characteristic of standardized commodities. The upstream core is agricultural products, primarily garlic, which also include chili peppers, cooking oil, salt, sugar, and other seasonings. The downstream reaches a vast consumer market, primarily through diverse online and offline channels. Global sales are projected to reach approximately 7.5 million tons in 2024, with an average market price of around US$1,100 per ton. Gross margins for the industry are expected to be between 15% and 30%. The support from the upstream garlic industry and policy regulations have also created favorable conditions for the industry. For example, the development of China's garlic industry provides a stable source of raw materials for garlic sauce. In terms of market competition, the garlic sauce industry faces homogeneous competition and an increasingly fierce market environment. Currently, there are numerous garlic sauce products on the market, and competition among brands is intense.">The development of the garlic sauce industry has primarily benefited from the dual growth in demand from the catering industry and household consumption.
