Abstracts

Hanging containers (also known as hanging containers or GOH containers) are specially designed for hanging clothing transportation. They allow clothing to hang naturally during transportation, thereby minimizing quality loss and shape deformation. They are particularly suitable for shipping high-end clothing. This type of container is mainly used to transport high-quality clothing that is easily damaged in traditional transportation methods. Once the GOH container arrives at the destination, the goods can be taken directly from the container and quickly placed in the store for display, greatly improving efficiency. The tube system is a system of multiple movable tubes installed in the hanging container, which can be adjusted in height and spacing to suit the size and type of clothing. Each tube can hold approximately 300 to 500 kg. The tubes in the hanging container can be configured in single or double rows, giving customers greater flexibility in storage. The tube system is ideal for transporting heavier garments such as coats, jackets and suits. These garments need to maintain their shape during transportation, so they are ideally transported using adjustable tubes. The rope system has a single row of hanging rods installed on the top of the container, evenly spaced between the rods, and ropes hanging vertically from these rods. The ropes are tied with knots and can hold 8 to 12 pieces of clothing. Each rod can hold 20 ropes, and the number of rods varies depending on the size and configuration of the container. The rope system is ideal for transporting large quantities of lightweight garments such as shirts, dresses and petticoats. It maximizes the storage space of the container without compromising the quality of the clothing.
