Abstracts

The 2025 U.S. tariff policies introduce profound uncertainty into the global economic landscape. This report critically examines the implications of recent tariff adjustments and international strategic countermeasures on Glass-plastic Hybrid Lens for High-end Smartphones competitive dynamics, regional economic interdependencies, and supply chain reconfigurations.In 2024, the global production of glass-plastic hybrid lenses for high-end smartphones will reach 72.31 million units, with an average selling price of US$8 per unit. As users' requirements for mobile phone imaging functions continue to increase, the specifications of mobile phone main cameras, telephoto, ultra-wide angle, periscope, ToF and other products are also constantly improving, which puts higher requirements on the design height, stability and resolution level of the lens. The performance of plastic lenses has reached its limit, and it has encountered bottlenecks in optical performance such as imaging clarity and distortion rate. The advantages of glass lenses, such as low dispersion, large amount of light input and thermal stability, enable glass-plastic hybrid lenses to obtain greater freedom in lens design, larger aperture and stronger resolution, breaking through the current bottleneck period of imaging technology. Moreover, the addition of glass lenses can effectively reduce the height of the lens, which is more conducive to matching the camera module of the large target surface sensor, making the mobile phone lighter and thinner.

The global Glass-plastic Hybrid Lens for High-end Smartphones market size was estimated at USD 579.0 million in 2025 and is projected to grow at a compound annual growth rate (CAGR) of 17.80% during the forecast period.
